Investment update - February

Fuelled by the swift COVID-19 vaccination rollout as well as the continuing decline in the number of new infections, February saw global markets rise as investors shrugged off the market volatility caused by the coordinated attacks on short sellers of GameStop shares towards the end of January. There has also been a cyclical move in recent months as economies continue to reopen, with lower-valued sectors of the market continuing to fare well. Investors were, however, spooked towards the end of the month by the steepening of yield curves and the prospects of rising inflation. The key drivers behind these inflation concerns were the US stimulus package as well as faster economic growth potentially triggering a reversal in the monetary policy stances of central banks. Whether this has been an overreaction is yet to be seen but our Investment Committee believe that further conditions need to be met before monetary policy becomes less accommodative. Additionally, central bank rhetoric regarding monetary policy remains in support of keeping interest rates lower for the time being and a willingness to let inflation run hot in the short term. Our Investment Committee remain vigilant and continue to closely monitor current events and whilst no strategic changes were made during the month, it was decided that for tactical reasons we would sell the Artemis US Absolute Return fund. Further details on this change will follow next month once implemented.
