Investment update

April saw some substantial moves in equity markets as President Trump's tariff announcements swayed market sentiment. Bonds were also volatile, however, the benchmark Barclays Global Aggregate Bond Index ended the month up and the sector continues to provide valuable diversification benefits. The US dollar weakened a further 3% against sterling over the month, significantly impacting returns on the dollar-denominated assets held in portfolios. Equity markets sold off sharply after the now infamous 'Liberation Day' tariff announcements, which proved to be broader and more substantial than expected. Heightened concerns about the impact on the US economy also led to general weakness in the more domestically orientated smaller company area of the market. Later in the month, President Trump announced a 90-day pause on most of his tariff proposals, together with some significant exemptions. This apparent softening in his stance was sufficient to drive a rally in stockmarkets, to the extent that the MSCI World Index ended the month only marginally down. Bond markets also recovered. The European Central Bank cut rates again by 25 basis points and expectations are for both the eurozone and the UK to cut rates further to support fragile levels of growth. Amongst all the recent turmoil in equity markets we have chosen to retain our exposure and ride out a period of extreme volatility. The risk of being whipsawed by recent volatility is huge and we have chosen to take a slightly longer-term view. While we haven't moved allocations within equities, we have taken some fixed income risk out of portfolios until the path for interest rates becomes a little clearer, at which point we will either reinvest back into the fixed income market or potentially into alternative investment funds. The strategy remains at the top end of its allowable equity range. We think that having some cash on the sidelines at present is prudent and gives us some optionality during a very uncertain period. While the short-term outlook remains very uncertain, there are a number of potential catalysts for a continued improvement in market sentiment. We will likely see negotiations leading to revisions and exemptions in the current proposed tariff backdrop.
